understanding of the natural world develops through direct, positive experiences with nature, supported by adult guidance. This study examined preschool children's developing relationships with the natural world over the period of a year. It focused specifically on three aspects of that relationship: emergent stewardship and Because unschooling follows principles of natural learning, children retain the curiosity, enthusiasm, and love of learning that every child has at birth. Unschooling, as Holt writes, is a matter of faith. "This faith is that by nature people are learning animals. Birds fly; fish swim; humans think and learn.
